Bio:

Marisol Vela walked into CFW's halls like she'd always belonged here—calm, deliberate, carrying an air of dark purpose. Born and hardened in the underground lucha circuits of Puerto Rico and the Southeastern US, Marisol carved her name in backroom deathmatches and indie promotions that don't put their names on posters.

Her fighting style is scrappy, calculated, and merciless—less about flash, more about damage. While she's no stranger to wrestling wars, her greatest weapon may be her mind—her ability to control the pace, manipulate outcomes, and bend others to her will without raising her voice.

She made her CFW debut as the manager and second to Dominic Hex, introducing herself with eerie calm and an unsettling intensity that silenced the entire Foundry. She calls herself his “mirror, not his voice,” acting as his guide and accomplice while pursuing her own path in the Women’s Division.

With her dark, tribal-inspired gear, ritual face paint, and heavy jewelry, she walks the line between brujería folklore and underground fight mysticism, but there’s nothing supernatural about her brutality—just cold calculation and intent.

In-Ring Style:

- Submission-heavy with vicious strikes and joint manipulation.
- Tactical; often works the arms and legs to leave opponents limping.
- Known to weaponize jewelry, ring skirts, and her surroundings if needed.

Notable Traits & Themes:

- Rarely speaks loudly—her promos are calm, deliberate, and unsettling.
- Her heritage informs her symbolism, but she owns her darkness—it’s not a gimmick, it’s armor.
- Frequently seen with Dominic Hex during his matches, but wrestles her own bouts as well.
- Wears face paint that evolves slightly over time, often tied to her current storyline.
- Views the wrestling ring as a “circle of trials”—victory or suffering, both are rites of passage.

Signature Moves:

- Sombra Lock: Inverted hanging armbar with throat pressure (often on the ropes).
- Vela Cutter: Snap rolling cutter from a standing headlock position.

- Hexmark Knee: Vicious running knee strike to the head—used in tribute to Hex’s brutal style.
