🧱 Overview

Adam Stryker didn't come back for nostalgia.

He came back out of spite.

A multi-time world champion and respected trainer, Stryker spent years building champions, shaping careers, and running a successful wrestling school and PR operation. He stepped away from the ring believing his work was done — believing the business was in capable hands.

Then he watched what it became.

To Stryker, modern wrestling isn't evolving — it's decaying. Too much flash. Too much ego. Not enough consequence. And while others complain from podcasts and commentary desks, Stryker chose a different route.

He laced his boots again.

Not to relive the past — but to erase the present.

In CFW, Adam Stryker positions himself as the last true measuring stick. The final standard-bearer of professional wrestling done the “right” way. Anyone who beats him earns respect. Anyone who loses proves his point.

Style & Strengths

- Technical brawler built on pressure, positioning, and punishment
- Heavy emphasis on limb control and grinding pace
- Veteran ring IQ — cuts off momentum before it starts
- Thrives in ugly matches where pride matters more than highlight reels

Stryker isn't fast — he's inevitable.

Signature Traits

- Wears a black and dark red singlet — scarred, simple, and timeless
 - Entrance jacket: hooded black leather, zipped halfway, no logos
 - He'll work alongside you if you have/earn his respect. Otherwise, he wants to be the one to bark orders
 - Known to stare down opponents after matches, win or lose
 - Treats younger wrestlers like projects he didn't approve of

Signature Moves

- Definition of Mayhem – Graveyard Smash
- Morituri Te Salutant – Reverse thrown Death Valley Driver

Often used as a direct setup for The Stryke

Finishing Moves

The Last Day on Earth — lifted into a Gory Special, then dropped into a sit-out piledriver, yanking the opponent's upper body down to force their head into the mat on impact. AKA Super Dragon's Barry White Driver.

- The Stryke – Gore

Sudden. Brutal. Final.

Notable Notes

- Former world champion across multiple independent promotions
- Founder of a respected Southern California wrestling school

- Returned to active competition after several years away from the ring
- Openly critical of modern wrestling trends — on and off camera
- Views CFW as a proving ground, not a destination
