SUDIO

The camera opens inside an upscale nightclub. Music hums softly beneath the conversations around the room. The CFW Women's Championship rests on the bar in front of Sudio. She sits comfortably, one hand resting on the title before looking into the camera.

Sudio:

When people talk about CFW now, they talk about where we're going.

Bigger shows.

New faces.

More opportunities...

I love hearing that.

Because it means everything we fought for was worth it.

But before any of that...

There was a time when this company was just trying to survive.

She glances down at the championship.

The women's division wasn't given a place here.

We earned one.

Lena.

Brandi.

Shayna.

Me.

We put this division on our backs because nobody else was going to do it for us.

Some nights it felt like we were carrying the whole company.

Not because anyone asked us to.

Because we believed this division deserved to matter.

She gently runs her hand across the faceplate of the championship.

I'm proud to be Women's Champion.

Not because I get to hold this title.

Because this championship means something.

It means something because of everything those women gave before it ever existed...

Blood.

Sweat.

Heart.

Time.

We built something together.

She looks back into the camera.

The match I always come back to is the Women's Gauntlet Match at Crossroads.

That wasn't just another match.

It was a fight for the future of this division.

Best friends fought like enemies.

Every woman walked through that curtain knowing she'd have to survive whoever came next.

Nobody held anything back.

Everybody left a piece of themselves in that ring because one opportunity meant everything.

That's the hunger I remember.

That's the fire that built this division.

And that's something I never want to lose.

She pauses.

That's why at Black Light 40, we're bringing the Women's Gauntlet Match back.

The winner earns the number one contender's spot for this championship.

She places her hand firmly on the title.

I don't care if you're a CFW original.

I don't care if you're making your very first walk through that curtain.

I don't care how many matches you've had.

I don't care how many people know your name.

I care what you're willing to do when the bell rings.

When I came to CFW...

Nobody knew who I was.

I wasn't the favorite.

I wasn't the biggest name in the room.

I earned every ounce of respect I have because I refused to stop fighting until people had no choice but to notice me.

That's all this division has ever asked of anybody.

Heart.

Resolve.

The will to keep getting up when somebody else thinks you're finished.

She slides the championship toward the camera.

This isn't just what you're fighting for.

You're fighting for the responsibility that comes with it.

You're fighting to carry everything the women before you built...

You're fighting to prove you belong here.

If that means something to you...

If you believe you're willing to outlast everyone standing across the ring from you...

Then I'll see you at the Women's Gauntlet Match.

She stands, lifting the championship from the bar.

Survive the gauntlet.

Earn the opportunity.

Then come find me.
